

Sales of outdoor optical cables for communication

Article Overview

Outdoor optical cables for communication are available in various types, including ADSS, armored, and loose-tube designs, suitable for aerial, duct, and direct burial installations, with direct sales and customization options from multiple suppliers.

Types of Outdoor Optical Cables

- ADSS (All-Dielectric Self-Supporting): Ideal for aerial installations without metallic support, resistant to electrical interference, and suitable for long-distance connections and rural broadband .
- Loose Tube Cables (GYTA/GYTS): Contain stranded buffer tubes with loose fibers, offering high fiber counts (up to 432 fibers), excellent bending performance, and compatibility with standard splicing .
- Armored Cables (GYTA33, GYFTA54): Include steel wire or aluminum tape armor for mechanical protection, rodent resistance, and suitability for direct burial or harsh environments .
- Figure-8 Cables: Self-supporting aerial cables with integrated messenger wire, designed for easy installation on poles .

Key Features

- Environmental Durability: UV-resistant jackets, water-blocking designs, and temperature endurance from -40°C to $+70^{\circ}\text{C}$.
- Mechanical Protection: Crush resistance, tensile strength, and rodent protection;...
